DISTRESSING CALAMITY.

An Interesting Youth Killed Under

Heartrending Circumstances.

It has become our painful duty this cinity in a long time, by which a promising son of one of our best fellow-citizens was killed in a shocking manner, a family overwhelmed with grief, and an entire neighborhood filled with gloom. The sad event happened in this way. Dr. Charlton, who lives out near the Murfreesboro turn pike, five miles from the city, has several sons, and among the number an intelligent lad named Robert, fourteen years of age.

One day last week the boys had felled a tree not far from their father's residence.

The tree was an oak, twenty-four inches thick at the stump, with a curving or bowed trunk. As the tree fell the stump and alid from the stump and lodged upon a gnarled root, the top of the tree so falling that the bow was uppermost, leaving the central portion of the trunk several yards above the ground. In this condition the fallen tree remained stationary, the top cently playing near the tree or log, as the limbs had all been trimmed off. In their mirthfulness they went up the log to the center of the bow, and were seated upon it enjoying the springing motion which its pe-culiar position afforded. While thus engaged, and in the highest of boyish glee, in such sports as come to us all at but one period of a life-time, the top bracing of the log t fell the younger brother was thrown a distance of some ten feet, and Charles Cole jumped in the opposite direction, both escaping unburt. Robert was caught scribable. The frantic mother gave vent the forest, and the stricken father was broken in soul at the loss of his noble boy, crushed to death before him, be-neighbors and friends at once gathered in large numbers. With their united efforts it was some time before the log could be removed and the remains taken from the position where the young life-blood had cozed away. The remains were finally extracted and removed to the house that had thus suddenly been turned into a house of mourning. The neighborhood was shocked at the occurrence and we tender our sincere condolence to the grief-stricken family,

The Food Crop.

Sufficient data have been received from all parts of the country, relative to the crops, to enable us to form a reasonably correct estimate of the yield. The crops are not in all respects fully up to the highest average of former years, but there is scarcely any staple that will not yield sufficient for home consumption, besides ranges from 10 to 13 per cent below the very high average of last year, but the quality is very much better, a fact that goes far to atone for any deficiency that may occur. Then there is still a very large stock of last year's crop on hand, and and it is possible that some may be lying over from the previous year. In no case therefore, will there be any approach to a scarcity. The surplus will be abundant for exportation, and there is little danger that the market can be depleted, even by the very large demand, which is rendered probable by the continuance of the war.

The corn crop is the best for the last ter years. The Northwestern and the Gulf States have raised a very large supply. The total crop is estimated at 210,000,000 bushels, at an average of thirty-five bushels to the acre. Corn figures more largely in the West and South as a commodity for home condumption than for exportation.

It will be remembered that in the autu f 1867 there was considerable exc in financial circles regarding the decision that the Treasury had redeemed about $50,000 of counterfeit 7-30 Treasury notes, presented by different banking firms in New York and Boston. The Government brought a test suit against Jay Cocks & Co. to recover the amount paid to them in redemption of said notes—about $18,000 which has been tried before Judge Blatch ford, in New York. We quote from the Herald's report:
The Government claims that the eighton notes in question are counterfeit, and that upon them restitution must be made. The defense claims, first, that the notes are genuine; second, that if they even were sterfeits the same rule apply to transactions with the Treasury Department that in a similar case would apply to a private banking association. The Government in inswer to this, contend that the Sub-Trea mry is merely an agency established here by the Government for the convenience and expedition of business, and that an acceptance by the Sub-Treasury of these ticular notes and payment thereof can not be considered a final redemption, redemption only accruing when the notes, after undergoing all the required examina-tion and scrutiny at Washington, received their final cancellation at the Treasury Department. If, as asserted by the dense, it was a mere contract between these defendants and the Sub-Treasury, the very discovery that the notes were fraudulent acted as a repeal to the contract, inasmuch as there was no consideration. Judge Blatchford, after a most patient earing of argument upon both sides, des cided the question as to the liability of the defendants, saying that inasmuch as the United States Sub-Treasury or the Trea-sury Department itself had no right to take any but good notes, the contract must be null and void; that the defendants, in preenting these notes to the Sub-Treasury, represented that they were genuine notes, and accepting that represention the Sab-Treasury had paid the money of the Gov-ernment upon them. The next question, which is still in dispute, is whether the notes are really genuine or spurious notes,
